

In his closing remarks, newly appointed Chair Wim Van Roy said, “We are a global family united by our love for automotive heritage. I am confident that the connections made here will strengthen our community. Let us continue to inspire each other and advance our shared mission of preserving automotive culture.”

Toyota Motor Corporation Chairman Akio Toyoda also took the stage at the party, saying, “As a car lover, a master driver and the Chairman of Toyota, I feel it’s important to not only preserve the history of automobiles and motorsports for future generations, but to bring it alive today and to make it as exciting and engaging as any sport or art form out there. “

“Historically Asia, has always been in the junior leagues, compared to Europe and the U.S. when it comes to automotive attractions and museums, but we’re slowly, but surely, making headway,” Toyoda added. “I believe our universal love of cars is something that unites people everywhere and for that reason alone, I think they are worthy of celebration.”
